Luke 9

“The kingdom of God is always bigger than the men who represent it. God’s family is as broad as His heart, but in that family are strange children. Alas, the family of God is divided into well-defined camps and between them are barbed-wire fences of separation. Both colour and creed have become insuperable barriers. We proclaim that all men in Christ are our brethren but we treat them as strangers; we love the glorious Gospel but doubt whether any other church can really do justice to its message” - Ivor Powell
